Hawaii Pacific University TESOL Working Paper Series

CALL FOR CONTRIBUTIONS

Editor: Dr. Hanh thi Nguyen

Aim and Scope
The Hawaii Pacific University Working Paper Series is dedicated to the publication of selected academic works on topics related to the teaching and learning of second languages with specific emphasis on the teaching of English to speakers of other languages. Papers included in the series should be relevant to theoretical and practical issues in second language teaching and contribute to current and future teachers’ understanding of theory and practice in second language teaching. The series includes papers in the following categories:

- original empirical research with implications for teaching
- critical and synthesized literature reviews with practical teaching applications
- reflective essays bringing together theory and practice
- original and practical ideas for teaching in the form of teaching units, teaching materials, or teaching activities
- book reviews

Distribution
The Hawaii Pacific University Working Paper Series is currently published online on the website of the Department of English & Applied Linguistics. It is released annually in December. From 2009, the Series is published entirely in online format. The Series is listed with HPU’s Meader Library and indexed in Google’s Scholar.

Decision
The editor of the Series, together with the TESOL faculty, makes final publication decisions based on the scope and quality of the submitted paper and subsequent revisions.

Criteria
Papers submitted to the Series must be well written, free of language errors, and follow the APA style of formatting strictly (see Purdue’s Online Writing Lab). Papers must be proofread carefully before submission.

Submission Deadlines
There are two deadlines per year, January 31st and September 15th. Please send your paper as an email attachment to Dr. Hanh Nguyen at hnguyen@hpu.edu.
